

No Place to Grow Old - A Community Screening

The Story

No Place to Grow Old is the story of three older adults - A union carpenter, a poet, and a computer engineer - all struggling to find a safe and stable housing to call home.

Why This Film Matters

More older adults are facing housing instability and homelessness than ever before. Rising housing costs, fixed incomes, limited affordable housing, and unexpected life events are making it increasingly difficult for older adults to remain safely housed. No Place to Grow Old tells these stories through the experiences of older adults in Portland, Oregon, but the conversation doesn't stop there. This event will connect the film to Richmond's own housing landscape, local data, and opportunities for action.

What to Expect

1. Richmond in Context - Local housing and homelessness trends, data, and community perspectives
2. Film Screening - No Place to Grow Old
3. Community Conversation - A moderated panel featuring leaders in housing, aging services, and community organizations focused on solutions and next steps.

Who Should Attend?

Lasting solutions begin with shared understanding. This event invites community members from every sector to come together, learn from lived experiences, explore Richmond's housing landscape, and discover how each of us can play a role in ensuring older adults have a safe place to call home.

Hosted by: Partnership for Positive Aging

Bringing together organizations across sectors to strengthen how our region supports older adults through education, advocacy, storytelling, and collaboration.
